

Vv

VA Hospital, Old

That was the old buildings which now the community college has and they've remodeled those so now you can't even tell what those were. In fact, the clock tower is where the patients ate their meals. It was here and the outbuildings were here. It's kind of a circle. Oh, let's see. We went in the drive. And it wound around. Oh this was a back road. Because there was a circle of building's around like that. This is Four. Building Five. Building Six. Building Seven. And then around oh, let see, there's a road that went through here, and here was Eleven and Ten. And Twelve. And Thirteen. And Fourteen. Four was locked ward. The whole building was locked. And

© Catherine V. Johnson,
Old VA Hospital

Five was when they got better. Seven was pretty much in disuse when I went back in '84. This one was still locked. And then they had built a new administration building over here in '98. There was a chapel. They built a chapel here. Ten, hydrotherapy was there. 58 was over here and that was the hospital building. I worked in 58 in the electric shock therapy. -Catherine V. Johnson

An excerpt from the Danville Community Encyclopedia by Anna Callahan. For more information visit www.anna-callahan.com.